

James C. Lumsden

James C. Lumsden has been on the civil litigation team at Citron & Citron since 2012. He has represented clients in a wide variety of legal matters including insurance defense, habitability, toxic mold, discrimination and harassment, premises liability, ADA/FHA defense, and landlord-tenant disputes. He handles files from opening through resolution. James demonstrates a unique calmness and control regardless of the situation at hand. He has become an able interrogator and hardly a week goes by without James taking or defending a deposition. James continues to hone his negotiation skills having participated in over 20 mediations.

He completed the American Board of Trial Advocates (“ABOTA”) trial school with high reviews from his instructors.

As an undergraduate, James majored in biology. His background in science has assisted in the defense of clients against claims of injury being attributed to exposure to toxic substances and mold.

Education:

- Queen’s University - Kingston, Ontario, Canada, B.S. (2007)
- Western State University, J.D. (Magna Cum Laude 2012)

Admissions:

- California State Bar (2012)
- United States District Court for the Central District of California

Representative Professional Recognitions/Affiliations/Activities:

- ABOTA – Los Angeles Trial School (2017)
- Member of ASCDC and other professional organizations